Guido Walraven has currently two jobs. He is part time professor at a (new) university and director of Walraven Educational Services. His work in primary, secondary and higher education includes research, development and consultancy. Some of his main themes during the last 20 years are (ethnic and socio-economic) diversity and participation (of youngsters, parents and professionals), social exclusion and (urban) citizenship.

He was co-ordinator of the nationwide evaluation of the educational priority policy and evaluated integrated services for children and youth at risk, including community schools. He is currently also the co-ordinator of the national 'Knowledge Centre for Mixed schools', that disseminates evidence based information for municipal governments, schools, school boards and parents.
